

Consent, Media Permissions

What else is a poem? is a research and development project, aiming to develop and share methods of working with non/minimally speaking disabled people to make poetry.

The main reasons for sharing images of the participants and the work produced by participants with the public are :

- To encourage other artists and workers to collaborate with non-speaking people more.
- Help people understand what it means to work with non/minimally speaking in an affirming way, and help people understand how non/minimally speaking people communicate.
- Give proper credit to the people who produced the work.
- Due to the visual and gestural nature of the work, film and photography are necessary tools we will use throughout the workshops.

Images, video, sound and artwork may be used for:

- My social media or website, or social media/website of any future partners.
- Show to funders of the project, now or in future.
- To collect in a zine sharing the process, and what worked/didn't work in sessions, available to the public

This means the public and people you don't know will be able to see your face/image and the work you produced.

You might :

Have no problem with this, and want people to see you and your amazing work!

Or, you might not want people to see what you look like, or the art and poetry you make.

You have a choice

This form is for you to say what you're comfortable with sharing.

You can change your mind, and I'll do things in the workshop like show you pictures of yourself and your work to see if this is something you like or don't like.

After a zine has been made and published, it will be hard to withdraw your image. Anything on social media is easier to take down and I can make changes if you change your mind about anything.
